STOCKINGS VS. HARTFORD.

Special Dispatch to The Tribune.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 27.—The critical sporting papers which have been picking flaws in the White-Stocking nine because it had no change pitchers will please notice the following score by which the hard hitters of the East made exactly one run off McVey, the Only Original Centennial Phenomenon. The fact that the Hartfords had all along been batting pitchers, though employing a thrower in the person of Bond, led Mr. Spalding to give McVey a chance to-day, and the result shows the wisdom of the move. An audience of about 2,500 witnessed the game, and were more than usually impartial in their applause. Both sides were blanked in the first two innings, and then Peters, getting first on a clean hit, stole second, went to third on Glenn's out, and made a run off Barnes' fine low drive. Encouraged by this, McVey opened the third inning by a hit through Carey, and went to second on Addy's safe hit. Both were advanced a peg on a passed ball, and then White came valiantly to the front with a long liner to right field, on which both men scored. In the fifth inning the Whites took another run on successive hits by Glenn, Barnes, and Anson. In the seventh inning Glenn again led off with a fine hit, and Barnes and Hines followed with clean drives, on which Glenn scored. Anson came to bat with Barnes on third, and hit a long fly to Remsen to save the run. It did it, and Barnes scored. After McVey had been retired, Spalding hit hard to Carey, and the ball being promptly muffed, Hines got home with the third run of the inning. Peters took the last White-Stocking run in the eighth inning, when he made a short hit which let him to first, whence he at once stole second, going to third on Glenn's out, and home on a passed ball. The only Hartford run was made in the third inning by successive hits by Harbidge, Burdock, and Remsen, the first-named scoring on Higham's long fly, well taken by Hines. After the fifth inning the home club were useless at the bat, and made only one clean hit in the last four innings. Their fielding was rather shiftless as the score shows. The Chicago played their usual close unyielding game in the field, and supported McVey finely, while at the bat they were lucky and deserving of it. Their strong point was, however, their base running, and that was what won the game for them as much even as their batting. It was the sharpest display of that part of the game ever seen in Hartford. The notable plays were made by Anson, White, and Hines, the latter taking a high ball after a long run, that secured him three rounds of applause. White's catching was the best, because the most difficult, he has shown this year. Following is
